ARTICLES

- United States Foreign Policy: Efforts to Penetrate Bank Secrecy in Switzerland from 1940 to 1975
James T. Kelly 211
- In this article, the author traces the efforts during the period 1940 to 1975 of United States governmental agencies to obtain information held secret by Swiss bankers. He describes the initial efforts made in World War II to prevent Axis flight capital and looted property from finding "safe haven" in Switzerland, continues with a detailed discussion of the Interhandel case, analyzes the 1970 Bank Secrecy Act, and highlights the positive aspects of the Swiss-American Treaty for Mutual Assistance in Criminal Matters now before the United States Senate.
- Consumer Credit Laws in the Common Law Countries
Frank W. Rhodes 263
- This article provides a glimpse into the basic laws relating to instalment credit contracts of five common law countries—England, Canada, Australia, New Zealand and the United States. The author discusses several significant developments in this area of the law, including the English Consumer Credit Act of 1974 and the Uniform Commercial Credit Code of the United States. A basic theme throughout the article is the trend in these nations away from usury laws and interest rate caps.
- Remembering Maine: Offshore Federalism
in the United States and Canada
George S. Swan 296
- The author discusses leading cases in Canada and the United States which resolve conflicting federal and state claims in these nations' marginal seas. He draws upon differing attempts employed in Australia and the United States to resolve such claims, and concludes by urging vigorous federal government roles to minimize potential for international disputes over adjoining marginal seas.
- U.N. Peace-Keeping Policy: Some Basic
Sources of its Implementation
Problems and their Implications
Agola Auma-Osolo 323
- In this article, obstacles to the United Nations' peace-keeping role are analyzed, and the decline of U.N. effectiveness is documented through the author's tabulations and graphs. The conclusion includes a recommendation for immediate creation and deployment of a World Military Command to implement United Nations policy.
